

Kelly's English-Manx Dictionary

compiled in 1866 by the Rev. John Thomas Clarke digital edition by Max W. Wheeler

May, 2020

The present digital edition (in PDF form) has been prepared as a contribution to the project of making digitally searchable as many as possible of the texts of Classical Manx. The circumstances of the original publication of this dictionary in 1866 (in fact, as the preface indicates, in 1867) are set out in William Gill's introduction reproduced below.

Spelling variation in Clarke's text is quite extensive, which is an obstacle to effective digital searches. For that reason, without introducing any spellings not found in the dictionary, I have unified spelling alternations, favouring majority usage, or aligning with Kelly's Manx-English Dictionary (K), Cregeen's Dictionary of the Manks Language (Cr), or the corpus of Classical Manx so far established, except where explicit alternatives are given in the dictionary. The following spelling variants, however, where no single alternative predominates, are retained:

Alpinagh (K) ~ Albinagh (Cr)
ammair (K) ~ ammyr (Cr) annooinid (K) ~ annoonid (Cr)
ard-nieu (Cr, K) ~ aer-nieu (K) ~ aaher-nieu aurys (K) ~ ourys (K, Cr) baare (K) ~ bayr (Cr) bluckan (K, Cr) ~ bluggan (Cr) boagane (K) ~ buggane (Cr) brack (Cr) ~ breac (K) ~ breck (Mosley, Clarke) (various species of fish) bwoailteen (Cr) ~ builteen (K) casag (Cr) ~ kessiag (K) carchuillag (Cr) ~ carwhuailag cluigeen (K) ~ cliegeen (K, Cr) craie (Cr, K) ~ crayee (K) craug (K) ~ croag (Cr) craugane (K) ~ croagane (Cr) crongan (K, Cr) ~ cronkan drilleen ~ drillin (Cr) farg (K, Cr) ~ ferg (Cr) gaag (K) ~ gaaig (Cr) gear (K) ~ gyere (Cr)

giarey ~ giarrey jiargid (K) ~ jirgid (Cr) jishig (Cr) ~ jyssig (K) juist (K, Cr) ~ jyst (K) liabage (K) ~ liehbage (Cr) loob- (K) ~ lhoob- (Cr) maihghey (K) ~ maihaghey (Cr)
mylg (K) ~ molg (Cr) Ollick, Nollick (Cr) ~ Ullick, Nullick (K) ousym (K) ~ oalsum (Cr) rhollan (Cr) ~ rollian (K) s̄chemeig (K) ~ s̄chimmeig (Cr) scoigh (Cr) ~ skaugh (Cr) 'disgust' scuigh (K) ~ skeoigh (Cr) ~ sgiuagh (K) ~ schoigh (Cr) 'neat' shinney, shint (K) ~ sheeiney, sheeint (Cr) skioge (K) ~ skeog (Cr) streeb- (K, Cr) ~ streep-stroinagh- (K) ~ stronnagh- (Cr) stroineeshagh (K) ~ stroinaasagh (not = stronaashagh) tinckleyr (K) ~ tingleyr (Cr) vaghee ~ veaghee

In the original, <ch> sometimes appears for [ç] 'slender h-' as in dy chionney for dy hionney, gless-chiass for gless-hiass, dy chiughey for dy hiughey. clagh-chentagh, clagh-chiollee. Probably <ch> was in the printer's source ms., before introduction of the <ç> symbol. Lenition of slender /tʲ/, /sʲ/, and /kʲ/ merge as <ch> occasionally in the 18th century, e.g. the 1765 Book of Common Prayer.

My editorial changes are indicated in red, as are editorial notes and observations. In bold I mark lenitions which are at least questionable, and in many cases are manifestly incorrect. Starting from about the middle of B-, Clarke seems to have persuaded himself that lenition in the second part of all compounds was more ‘correct’, whatever the gender of the head, as was lenition in (most) adjectives following plurals ending in -n. He also believed that f could lenite to v, so offering greim-veeackle ‘bite’, drollane-vaitagh ‘dastard’, neu-vendeilagh ‘defenceless’. These ‘rules’ are alien to the practice of Manx writers before Clarke, including of Kelly in the Manx-English Dictionary, and, indeed, of subsequent writers and speakers.

I have highlighted in yellow a selection of Manx words and expressions not located elsewhere in Cregeen’s or Kelly’s dictionaries.

Whereas Kelly’s Manx-English Dictionary of 1866 has been reprinted (with an amended title), in 1977, and is well known to, and used by, students of Manx, Clarke’s compilation has been less fortunate. It is not difficult to understand why. It is frankly unsatisfactory as a bilingual dictionary for practical use, in several respects. Kelly’s Manx-English Dictionary has a little fewer than 14,000 entries. Clarke’s English-Manx compilation has almost 20,000 entries, an increase of some 42 per cent. (In both, there are more words than entries, in that many entries are headed by more than one word; see below.) But the proportional increase in the English-Manx vocabulary often consists of obscure English words a user is most unlikely to seek in a Manx dictionary, or indeed in any dictionary. I mention some examples from entries beginning with M-, from which I shall also select for other observations that follow. Clarke has, for example, headings: macaw-tree, mactation, maculate, madefaction, madeify, maffle, mainprize, makepeace, malkin, malleate, mammoth, mancipate, manducate, mantuamaker, maudle, maugre, maund, mawmet, melwel, mersion, metheglin, methodise, miche, midheaven, mimical, minish, misdoubt, mispersuasion, misseem, moil, monachal, monish, mordicant, morion, morphew, morsure, nowburn, mufti, muliebrity, multipede, murrey, myope —24 of which even Microsoft Word’s spelling-check does not recognise. One might well have to look up words such as these in an English–English dictionary; who would be expected to do so in an English–Manx one?

A good bilingual dictionary seeks in the first place to identify appropriate glosses (translation-equivalent words) in the target language for its entries. It falls back on definitions, or explanations, only when no suitable gloss is available. But Clarke too often offers definitions or explanations that are not the most helpful. For example, under MACE, the dictionary gives keint dy spios; yn vrattag, ny’n vreidag, ny’n slatt, t’er ny ymmyrkey roish yn Chiare-as-feed, yn Chiannoort as yn Aspick. The definition for the first sense keint dy spios gives merely a superordinate term, explaining what kind of thing ‘mace’ is. Clarke resorts to this practice rather often; thus keint dy appears some 64 times.¹ The second sense of MACE is explained with something more like an encyclopaedia entry, though it includes what may well be the best gloss: slatt, alongside others —brattag/breidag ‘flag, ensign’— which are less appropriate. Clarke is especially inclined to provide an encyclopaedia entry when the gloss would be an Anglicism, as with MANNA, s. beaghey flaunyssagh ny Hewnyn ayns nyn droailt trooid yn aasagh. The Manx word manna is in Kelly's Manx-English dictionary and in the Manx Bible, and was already in Phillips' Manx Prayer Book of 1610. Clarke explains MARQUIS as mac shinney Duic; the Manx word markys is in Kelly, and is even given by Clarke himself under MARCHIONESS – ben-varkeys. MARTYR, s. is explained as feanish-vaaish son y chredjue; but the Manx noun martyr appears in the explanation of English MARTYR, v. dy chur gy baase son y chredjue, dy hurranse baase myr martyr. MULE is explained as lieh-assyl, lieh-chabbyl, lhiy-chabbyl assylagh, although Manx miyl was already in Phillips' Prayer Book (mule in the Manx Bible). Nevertheless, some acknowledged Anglicisms are included; their status, as items not subject to any respelling, is indicated as in the original with spaced type, as in maple, melon, myrrh.

¹ In addition, that is, to keint glossing ‘class’, ‘gender’, ‘kind’, and ‘sort’, as is to be expected. So ‘anchovy’ is keint dy skeddán, ‘coriander’ is keint dy luss, and ‘chestnut’ and ‘cocoa’ are both keint dy chro. All of ‘dolphin’, ‘sturgeon’ and ‘toadfish’ are just eeast-varrey, while ‘perch’ and ‘roach’ are just eeast. ‘Turbot’ is at least eeast feer vlastal. All of ‘agate’, ‘diamond’, ‘hyacinth’ and ‘malachite’ are just clagh-ooasle. ‘Mercury’ is ennym rollage. ‘Macaw’ is just ushag Injinagh. ‘Marjoram’ is just luss-villish, while ‘savory’ is luss-villish-vlastal.

While some of Clarke's items read like encyclopaedia entries, others resemble thesaurus entries, often with as many as eight alternative glosses, which, for practical use, are insufficiently focused on the distinctive sense(s) of the English word. For example, MERCILESS, a. neu-vyghinagh, mee-hymmoil; neu-ghooie; neu-ghooghyssagh; mee-ghiaistyllagh; (neu-chenjal. C.): here the essential sense is well captured in the first two glosses. Likewise, MIRE, v. dy laaghey, dy villey, dy yeeilley, dy vroghey, dy hallaghey, dy vreinnaghey; of these, only dy laaghey closely captures the sense of 'mire'. The other words are just what you might put in a thesaurus entry. The definition of MINUTENESS takes a blunderbuss approach: kinneigid, keylid; floagid; slooid, begganid, beggid. While sometimes a semi-colon distinguishes different senses, or between homonyms as seen in the case of MACE above, the semi-colon is used far too inconsistently for the user to make a reliable inference from its presence or absence.

Often Clarke's headings combine two (sometimes three) English words which are close in alphabetical order, but are not synonyms: MAID, MAIDEN, s. moidyn, caillin, inneen, innney-veyl, (doodee. C.); similarly MEDAL, MEDALLION; MELLIFEROUS, MELLIFLUOUS; MEMORANDUM, MEMORIAL, MEMENTO; MUD, MUDDLE, v. The user must guess which gloss belongs to which English word.

Only occasionally are there manifest errors of interpretation of the English. One such from M- is MENAGE, s. thie-chretooryn-feie, C. where Clarke gives a definition that belongs to 'menagerie' which itself follows immediately: MENAGERIE, s. bwoaillee son eeanlee as cretooryn feie. C.

Nevertheless, while Clarke's compilation has many inadequacies as a bilingual dictionary, it is not without value to the student of Manx vocabulary and idiom. For one thing, Clarke includes a good number of words, expressions, or senses which are not otherwise recorded in dictionaries. (Several of these are highlighted in yellow in the present edition.) Some examples from M-are culleeder 'mace-bearer', also 'ensign-bearer'; kionardagh 'magisterial', luss-y-chadlee 'mandrake', screeage 'mark', also 'rent, scratch', mummigagh 'maternal', midjin 'mayfly', lieenteenagh, sniimmeeagh both 'meshy', caillee hagggyrtyn 'millepedes', fer-ny-ghulgyrnee [recte fer-ny-dulgyrnee] 'miracle-monger', gless-scaanagh 'mirror', puissyn 'mole' (skin blemish), loirranagh 'motherless', immanys 'motion', dhiane-ny-hooirey 'muckworm', calloo 'muscle', also 'pier, column' (cf. K calloo 'calf of the leg'; ScG. colbh 'pier, column').

And Clarke's thesaurus-style glosses, while less helpful in a dictionary consultation, are of more value to the student of Manx lexis, because they contribute, as a thesaurus can, to identifying the scope or range of a word's meaning. For example, taishnys (K taaishnys ‘moisture, dampness’) is in Clarke a gloss under ‘evaporation’, ‘exhalation’, ‘humidity’, ‘lubricity’, ‘moisture’, ‘mouldiness’, ‘mucilage’, ‘slime’, ‘softness’, ‘vapour’, ‘wateriness’, and ‘wetness’. Lheiltagh, in Cregeen ‘a mover, one who can use or exercise his limbs’, has, as one might expect, adjectival use; in Clarke, under ‘active’, ‘light’, ‘live’, ‘mettled’, ‘mettlesome’, ‘nimble’, and ‘sprightly’; and its contraries: neu-lheiltagh ‘abject’, ‘deadly’, ‘deedless’, ‘idle’, ‘inert’, ‘listless’, ‘lumpish, lumpy’, ‘numb’, ‘senseless’, and ‘still’; anlheiltagh ‘decrepit’, ‘feeble’, ‘invalid’, and ‘stagnant’. In Cregeen, greesaghey is ‘kindling, stirring, stimulating, provoking to action’; Clarke mentions dy ghreesaghey (unmodified) under ‘abet’, ‘actuate’, ‘disconcert’, ‘disquiet’, ‘egg on’, ‘empassion’, ‘enkindle’, ‘exasperate’, ‘excite’, ‘expedite’, ‘foment’, ‘fry’, ‘inflamm’, ‘instigate’, ‘kindle’, ‘menace’, ‘nettle’, ‘offend’, ‘provoke’, ‘rouse’, ‘spirit’, ‘stimulate’, ‘tempt’, and ‘urge’. Kelly glosses jeelym as ‘the gleaning’, and Cregeen as ‘any thing that is lost in the gathering, as corn when reaping or stacking; drops from a vessel on bringing a liquid; a remnant’. From Clarke we get, in addition, ‘extirpation’, ‘offal’, ‘offscouring’, ‘ooze’, ‘relic’, ‘remainder’, and ‘residue.’ Such benefit of Clarke’s compilation can only be exploited with digital searching, of course.

The origin and the procedure of compilation of Kelly’s English-Manx Dictionary is succinctly explained in William Gill’s preface given below. He mentions the incorporation into the dictionary of items supplied by Clarke himself (C.), or drawn from the work of Cregeen (Cr.) and Mosley (M.). There are 4136 such items supplied by Clarke, with 511 attributed to Cregeen, and 178 to Mosley. However, a fair number of Clarke’s items are to be found already in Kelly’s Manx-English, or in Cregeen. The items attributed to Cregeen may well be given with different spellings or different glosses. So not too much significance can be placed on the presence, or absence, of the indications C. and Cr. (though the M. entries do seem to be due to Mosley alone). The manuscript of Kelly’s Triglot dictionary (English–Manx, Irish, Scottish Gaelic) to which Gill refers is held in the Manx Museum (MS 002045, and a fair copy MS 000051). I hope, when it becomes possible, after the COVID-19 coronavirus shut-down ends, to consult the manuscript to obtain a better idea of how the present dictionary relates to it. It is clear from Clarke’s correspondence, though, that he considered the English-Manx Dictionary his own achievement. His correspondence relating to the dictionary appears in the Appendix that follows this introduction.

Correspondence from J. T. Clarke relating to Kelly's dictionaries

The first letter appeared in the Manx Sun of Saturday May 9 1868. It responds to a previous letter signed by Yn Chenn Vanninagh which I have not been able to locate in the Manx Museum's online iMuseum newspaper archive.

THE MANX DICTIONARY.

To the EDITOR of the MANX SUN.

SIR,—Will you oblige me in your next publication of the Manx Sun by informing the correspondent terming himself "Yn Chenn Vanninagh," who publicly blames me specially for the inaccuracies in the first part of the Manx Dictionary, that I had nothing whatever to do with that part of the work. I did not even see it until revised and printed, when I was supplied with a finished copy at my own request, that I might make the second part of the work, viz., the English and Manx, as consistent as I could with the former part; therefore, the editor is alone responsible for the first part of the work, and to him exclusively "Yn Chenn Vanninagh" must hereafter refer. I shall willingly assist him in criticising the second part of the work, whenever he thinks proper to do so.

JOHN THOS. CLARKE, Foxdale.

The editor to whom Clarke refers is William Gill, as his next letter spells out.

The 9 May letter was followed up with a fuller account on Saturday May 23, 1868.

THE MANKS DICTIONARY

To the EDITOR of the MANX SUN.

SIR,—In answer to the onslaught lately made upon me relative to the inaccuracies in the Manks Dictionary I had only time to deny having ever anything to do with the first part of the book, and briefly to exculpate myself from the errors attached to me, but upon further reflection I should also have advanced something in behalf of the editor who had the sole management of the part which was criticised.

I remember distinctly upon remonstrating with Mr Gill for compromising himself by passing over the inaccuracies which abounded in Dr Kelly's work, especially in the adjective mutations and many substantives as well, his answer to me was that having been publicly rebuked by Mr Harrison of Rockmount, for alterations which he had thought proper to make in the text of the Manks Grammar instead of appending his observations in a note, as far as he would be concerned with the Dictionary it should be Dr Kelly's and nothing but Dr Kelly's. By way of reply, I said, if the Manks Society expected me to submit to restrictions contrary to my own intimate acquaintance with the Manks dialect, I would have nothing to do with the work. Upon application therefore to the committee I obtained full and free scope to improve the second part of the work, as I saw it required. I did indeed judge it advisable to make numerous alterations on my own responsibility, to which I attached the initial of my name, that I might be the more easily remonstrated with if wrong. In hundreds of instances I corrected Dr Kelly without attaching my name at all. The editor revised and sanctioned the whole so as to pass them, and I shall now feel pleased with him or any other well qualified Manks scholar to point out to me the “alterations which cannot be acknowledged” to be correct. But the errors must be marked by Manks scholars who have not merely book-knowledge of the language, but who can also freely and without restraint converse in the language as well as they do in English, otherwise they are no Manks scholars.

I must acknowledge errors to have crept into my part of the work, viz., the English and Manks, over which unfortunately I had no control—errors introduced after the proof sheets had been forwarded by me to the press—which I can easily prove by my own manuscripts. By whom such an unwarrantable liberty was taken I will not presume to say.

Errors also were introduced by the editor's obstinate adherence to the Manks translation of the Bible. Any deviation, however simple, from the language of the Manks Bible was crossed, however erroneous it might be. I frequently endeavoured to prove from the very scripture itself which he quoted against my Manks the inaccuracies and the inconsistencies of the translators themselves, yet nothing could convince him that the old clergy could be wrong, as if the men were inspired as to the language, that they could not err. In every chapter quoted by the editor to correct my Manks I pointed out errors on account of which the Bible in Manks could not be received as a standard in the Manks language. I remember especially in the xi. chapter of Revelations I pointed out eight mistakes in the Manks language, and, singular to say, the last verse in that chapter corrected two of the mistakes, namely—the word “craa-hallooin,” which is the proper Manks for earthquake, and not “craa-thallooin” as is twice mentioned in the thirteenth verse.

But I verily believe that the late Archbishop Whateley himself, the best logician of his day, could not have persuaded Mr Gill to alter his opinion of the Manks translation of the Scriptures.

Instead of being offended with “Yn Chann Vanninagh” for criticising strictly the second part of the Manks Dictionary when he comes to it, I shall rejoice to help him if necessary, at least, I shall acknowledge my errors when pointed out.

JOHN THOS. CLARKE.

Clarke is right to imply that the form craa-hallooin is preferred in the Manx Bible (10 occurrences). Craa-thallooin occurs three times, once in Rev. 9.13, once in Rev. 16.18 and once in Amos 1.1; the other case in Rev. 9.13 that Clarke alludes to is a little different: craa mooar thallooin ‘great earthquake’; see also chraa mooar thallooin in Rev. 16.18. Clarke does not acknowledge that variation in the Bible might be acceptable. In the light of Clarke’s idiosyncratic understanding of ‘adjective mutations and many substantives as well’ we must be grateful to Gill for his obstinacy in protecting Kelly’s own Manx in his part of the Dictionary in the face of Clarke’s pressure.

At the end of the copy of Cregeen's dictionary held in the Wellcome Library, University of London, available on archive.org,² is a 12-page manuscript letter from Rev. J. T. Clarke to Rev. William Drury (vicar of Braddan), dated 17 April 1872. In it, after some account of the author's health problems, he refers to a letter of his printed in Mona's Herald of 21 Feb. 1872 and the address to the Manx Reading meeting, 19/02/1872, by Thomas Caine, vicar of Lonan (these are items 16 and 17 in Lewin's Lioar-lhaih Ghaelgagh). The second part of the letter bewails William Gill's shortcomings as editor of Kelly's Manx and English Dictionary.

I edit Clarke's letter below:

2. St Helen's Place
St Helen's Road
Swansea
April 17th / 72.

My dear Sir /

I enclose you one of our weekly Advertisements of the 10th March ult^{mo} to show you the last Sunday I have been able to preach in Swansea.

Having in winter exchanged with a Swansea Clergyman to preach^d an evening Sermon &c. during | M^r Moore's visit to his native home, it came on such torrents of rain that when I was near my destination I went plump in the dark into a pool right over my boots. I had to do the whole service in that state. Had I afterwards have taken sufficient care of myself & nursed myself, all might have ended well – but no the old stamina still – “too wise in my own eyes,” I sought to shake the cold off by constant | visiting, but it clung to me like a leech, and I have been 5 weeks, dressed undressed and fed like a young child.

Thank God the mild acute rheumatism which has made me like a “Lhiannag” has taken a change for the better, & I have the use of my knees & feet again & three fingers to write.

And now, having plenty of leisure, I make use of the 3 fingers to scribble to you, asking why don't you take a more active part with the | Manx Champions in Peel. If you saw my Manx letter in the Mona's Herald of 21st Feb^{ry} which is so badly printed that I can scarcely decipher it myself, you will see my plan of making the Mx dialect useful namely by having adult schools merely to teach them to read the Bible – & on that account I would say, keep it up as long as a Mx adult can be found ignorant of reading his Bible.

But you need not be ashamed, I should think, of your Manx. Surely you know it as well as the | vicar of Lonan.³ I am surprised he does not know it better than to use the word “Boaylyn” for “Buill” in his address in the Herald at the great Mx Meeting in Douglas. again lheid y “shilley” instead of “chilley”, also ‘shirveish’ instead of saying “jannoo yn Chirveish”. He says “van chenn conaant” instead of saying chonaant – but I am surprised at seeing in his opening address “ny Scriptyryn t'ad ayns ymmodee boayllyn” instead of “buill” – again dy geddyn meanal – instead of dy gheddyn baght ny tushtey. Just like the late Parson Gell – he studied Manx by book – perhaps occasionally by conversation, when he wanted to earn his bread by it. Consequently he ~~does~~ | <could> not naturally, (as he must do if he had been brought up among old Mx people speaking Mx & reading it at 10 years old as well very nearly as at 20) use the mutative adjectives as their antecedent substantives require to give them their full possessive meaning. Gell for the life of him could not get in to that – such as “lhie-greiney” losing the possessive “h” which it required – namely “lhie-ghreiney”⁴ then like a pig in a gap – he would not be taught by another. The particle “ny” placed between the two words would | be correct lhie-ny-grein[ey] but that is a peculiar idiom belonging to the Manx dialect. Omitting the “h” in the mutative adjective and sometimes inserting ~~them~~ it when ~~they~~ it ought <not to be> is almost sure to follow the adult study of the Manx – instead of coming into that knowledge naturally in ones youth by constant conversation.

² In the images available at <https://wellcomelibrary.org/item/b29349692#> only a few of the pages of the letter can be seen, between pages iv and v.

³ Thomas Caine (vicar of Lonan 1853-79).

Caine says, & it does not appear as a misprint – speaking of Bishop Hildesley & the Mx Bible “yiow eh lheid yn boggey jeh” which ought to be render^d “ghow eh lheid y voggey jeh”. Now this is all owing to <the want of> strict observant practice in Mx conversation & writing a great am^t of Mx. Again he says “te red feer yindyssagh nagh vel yn gaelck goll-rish yn vaarle”, robbing the word gaelck | of the letter “h” – & doing justice to the word baarle by the mutative “v”.

The sentence must be govern^d by one grammatical Rule – either you must say “nagh vel yn gaelck goll-rish yn baarle” – or else “nagh vel yn ghaelck goll-rish y vaarle.”

Gell⁵ in the same way following Dr. Kelly through thick & thin would not be persuaded to alter – I could give hundreds of words in the Mx & Eng Dic^{ty} perfectly incorrect & inconsistent. I have <this moment> open^d the Dictionary & I see an instance at once – lhiabbee-chlooie, lhiabbee-troggal, instead of lhiabbee-hroggal, if troggal is right, “chlooie” is wrong – it ought to be clooie, but chlooie & hroggal <are correct>. And there are scores of words in my part wrong which I could not get right owing to obstinacy. | Then if my Manx was different in any instance to that of the Mx Bible I might as well whistle to the wind to be clam as contradict <him>. I remember one victory I had to which he yielded, namely craa-hallooin instead of craa-thallooin as he wish^d it because he saw it twice craa-thallooin in the XVI <Ch.> – 18 of Revelations, but when I refer^d him to Rev. VIII <C> – 5 and XI <C.> – 19 in both which verses he found craa-hallooin & told him any plough-boy would correct him, he allow^d me to have craa-hallooin in my part. but in order to show you the perverse wilfulness of the man, look in the 1st part of the Dictionary for the word “Craa” | and you’ll find he has both craa-thallooin & craa-hallooin, unwilling you see to give in an inch to any man even in a word so plain.

I see another instance in the Dictionary, so plain that if it had horns it might push a man into rectitude. Look for “Cramman”, Gell has got “cramman-ghayl” a lump of coal, but he could not see the next example “moainey” to be incorrect, and make it as it ought to be – “Cramman-voainey”. Now in the word Clagh there are a great many examples of | adjectives annexed to Clagh to signify what kind of stone, among them all Gell must have a mistake. he has inserted the word “Clagh-taarnee”, so common a word too. I could find nearly 1000 mistakes

⁴ lhie-ghreiney in Cregeen, and Tobit 2.7; lhie-greiney in Kelly’s dictionary. Clarke’s English-Manx has only lhie-ny-greiney.

⁵ William Gill (né Gell) (1797-1871), senior editor of John Kelly’s Manx and English Dictionary, published by the Manx Society in 1866.

in Gell's part of the Mx Dictionary and many most provoking ones admitted by himself and Mosley to spoil my work. But as a real friend to you, I want you to be on your guard in heading the Mx laws – | & dont depend too much on the Mx Dictionary.

Only compare the mutative adjectives connected with their substantives – one with the other – and you'll get into the system quickly enough. Look in the Mx Dictionary for the word "thie", & its mutative adjectives & there are 14 or 15 mistakes. There is "thie-veg" that Mr. Paul Bridson himself knew, but Gell must have "thie-mooar", instead of "thie-vooar", if "thie-mooar" be correct, it ought to be "thie-beg".

But I must not tire you out & out. & my poor fingers are getting sore.

Mrs C– joins me in best wishes for yourself & all your family.

JOHN IVON MOSLEY (1830-1876), Compiler of the Manx Dictionary.

[by C. Roeder]

John Ivon Mosley, the accomplished wood turner and linguist, belongs to that bright band of entirely self-taught and toiling Lancashire men whose life-long struggles for a mere living have not incapacitated or daunted them from cultivating, and ever nourishing to the last, an intellectual taste for all branches of learning, either in the field of letters, art, or science. His modest position in life, accentuated by acute sensitiveness, and the lack of a more practical turn of mind, were elements which prevented him from shaking himself free of conditions which left him a prey to constant cares, and doomed him to perpetual drudgery, while life lasted. It is, therefore, little surprising that he lived and died in his native town in semi-obscurity, and that the circle of those who did most appreciate his extraordinary powers and his amiable character was composed of a mere handful of men.

Born on the 7th of December, 1830, John Ivon was the third son of Daniel Mosley, who had come from Cubley, on the borders of Staffordshire and Derbyshire ; he claimed kindred with the stock of Sir Oswald Mosley, and was originally a yeoman. There he became many things in turn, warehouseman, shopman, traveller, and collector, acting besides as local preacher of the Primitive Methodists. His mother, a daughter of the Rev. Wm. Wade, minister of Salthouse Lane Chapel, Hull, was a good religious woman, who died at the ripe age of 77. Of all the seven children, John Ivon proved the only one who evinced early signs of mental superiority, and a love for poetry or language. This tendency was not derived from either of his parents ; his mother, however, appears to have been a well-read woman who took great interest in her husband's work. He spoke almost all the European languages, and knew and examined many of those of Asia, (Australia, Africa, and North America ; dictionaries and grammars he almost devoured. He delighted in all books of travel for reference and information concerning the language, customs, and manners of the people, from which he carefully garnered up extracts in his note books ; these notes are found always carefully copied in a lovely round hand, and bear the impress of thoroughness, neatness, and method.

His name is best known in connection with the part he took in the preparation of the English-Manx dictionary, published 1866 by the Manx Society, as their Vol. XIII., and printed for the same by John Heywood, Deansgate. It was prepared from Dr. Kelly's Triglot dictionary, with alterations and additions from the dictionaries of Archibald Cregeen and John Ivon Mosley. For, in the editor's preface, the Rev. Wm. Gill, remarks :—"Their attention. was then directed to an English and Manx dictionary in manuscript which purported to supply the place of a second part to Dr Kelly's Dictionary. This was the work of Mr. John Ivon Mosley, of Manchester, a gentleman who without any of the advantages of a residence in the Isle of Man, had prepared a dictionary which reflected great credit on his intellectual acumen and philological research. It became, however, a matter of inquiry how far an English and Manx dictionary might be drawn from the doctor's own more copious work." The Society decided on availing themselves of the doctor's learned labours, " and adding thereto all such words from Cregeen and Mosley's dictionaries as would improve and enrich the volume." Principal Rhys in his " Outlines of Phonology of Manx Gaelic (Manx Society, Vol. XXXIII, 1894), briefly refers to Mosley's work, and adds, "His dictionary appears never to have been printed." In this he is perfectly correct, and I think it is but due to the memory of Mosley to advert more minutely to his Manx studies and to show how far he was concerned in the publication of the Society's dictionary, what qualifications he brought to it, and what share he had in this transaction.

When entering on the study of Manx, he commanded already a full grasp of Welsh, Gaelic, and Irish, and his attack on Manx was an almost natural step. It appears he began as early as 1851 (aet. 21) when he crossed over to the Isle of Man to study Manx on the spot, under Dan. Teare, of Ballaskilly, his chief object being to acquire the proper pronunciation and structure, and obtain a conversational mastery of the spoken language, and, at the same time, to collect material. But it was during 1855 that he first made more serious efforts and headway; in 1857 he was so far advanced that he could address and write to his Manx friends in the vernacular. He had equipped himself from Quaritch, and from Kneale, in Douglas, with grammar, dictionary, bible, tracts, carols, Milton's Paradise Lost, and other theological works, translated into Manx, and stood in close correspondence with Looney, of Ramsey, Jas. Killey, of Douglas, Kennish, of Coma,, Dan. Teare, Kissag, the blacksmith, Ramsey, Evan Christian, of Lewaigue, and many others who supplied him also with old M.S. books and glossaries of every description. He went over on different occasions, moving amongst fishermen, farmers, and cottagers, always on the alert for fresh words or phrases, conversing only in Manx, of which he was then full master. It was the real want of an English-Manx dictionary which urged him to the task of undertaking the composition of such a work, and when he had fully made up his mind he set about it with an ardour and devotion truly astonishing. In going through the visitors' book of the Chetham library, I found that for many consecutive years he was an almost daily visitor, and from the entries it will be seen that, as a basis of operation, he availed himself of Cotton and Cruden's Bible Concordance, along with Webster's dictionary, Louth's English grammar, Wilson's Manx translations, and the Manx Bible, for the construction of his dictionary. To this he added the large stock of words and phrases accumulated by him and his Manx friends, both in the Island and in Manchester, the whole interspersed with copious references and quotations to illustrate the genius and peculiarities of the language. The work involved him in tremendous labour, but it was done with a will, and his love for the labour cheered him in his nightly toilings. After he had his slips arranged in systematic order he began transcribing, but constantly adding to and re-shaping his notes, and, as I am informed by his surviving widow, before he was perfectly satisfied, he recopied his MS. four times, all done in beautiful calligraphy. He had brought together from 30,000 to 40,000 words ~ and phrases, which will give an idea of the strain and exertion this task entailed upon him. When the dictionary was complete it formed four big MS. folio volumes, the material alone filling a big case. It was in 1862, after eight years hard and incessant application, that he put the finishing stroke to it. While working away at the Chetham Library, he was one day introduced by Edwards to the Rev. W. MacKenzie, a member of the Council of the Manx Society, who was so much struck with Mosley's linguistic powers that he brought the matter under the notice of the Society, who urged him to come over with his MS. dictionary. MacKenzie writes on the 19th September, 1861, in the "Mona's Herald" :—"The Manx Society has discovered in Manchester a remarkable man who has a genius for language, and who has made the Manx his special study. He has actually finished an English Manx dictionary, and is willing to give his MS. to the Manx Society for a very reasonable price. This a lady has offered to pay." In response to an invitation of the Society, Mosley went over to Douglas on the 5th of March, 1862, whence he writes to his wife that he "arrived in Gorryland with his eight years toil on his back, and that he was very kindly received by the Council of the Manninee, who gave him £5.

The "Mona's Herald," in 1862, refers to Mosley's extensive acquaintance with Welsh, Irish, Gaelic, and Manx. It would appear that final proposals had been made to him with regard to his MS., for the notice continues: "The proofs are to be corrected by him, assisted by Manx scholars of the Island."

Unfortunately, however, the offer to acquire the MS. came to nothing, and he was asked instead to correct the proofs. The result was a great blow to Mosley; nevertheless he agreed to supervise the printing of the compilation prepared by the Manx Society. The work was to be set in type in Manchester, no printer being qualified in Douglas to take charge of it. The task was no light matter, and from 1863 to 1867—for five long years—poor Mosley aided as type-setter and proof reader in connection with the Society's dictionary, a hash of Kelly's, Cregeen's, and Mosley's dictionaries, and a piece of work of such inferior and disappointing nature in every direction that it should certainly have been left alone. His position, while acting in that capacity, belongs to the darkest years of his life; he was under hands which did not deal gently with him and his susceptibilities. He was present again at a Committee meeting of the Society in Douglas on the 11th May, 1867. He had given 13 years of his life's devotion to this piece of work, and his energy had been heavily taxed. The reward he received was, however, so inadequate and disappointing that, on his return, he dismissed that language for ever from his mind. It was to have been his "magnum opus." If the Society had accepted the four MS. volumes, it would, no doubt, have formed a valuable reference book for Celtic scholars, or anyhow remained a lasting monument of his great industry. The MS. was still in existence in 1885, but subsequently his family lost it irrecoverably, and at present there are only a few fragments of a draft in existence.

With him language was not a mere mechanical vehicle but an edifice of a subtle structure clothed with distinct individuality and life, and one of the phases of mental development. He was eminently a comparative linguist, with an intuitive quickness to seize upon analogies and shadings and nuances. It was the philosophic aspect which charmed him and pushed him constantly forward in his studies. He was always, so to say, seeking for prey and fresh food for thought and some new truth or light. He not only loved language, as such, but in its co-relation to man and how it affected his mental and emotional status. His ear was acute in the extreme in the distinction and analysis of pitch and sound, and he was quick to seize upon any peculiarity—a circumstance which helped him not a little in assimilating any language. But it must also be distinctly borne in mind that, although gifted with a natural genius for language, it was painstaking, unceasing, hard work and toil which led, in course of time, to a facility which seemed intuitive and instinctive. This he owned and declared himself. He was not of a common type and satisfied with a knack for anything, but penetrated with true scholarly feeling and aware he had no free scope for the proper expanse and growth of his faculties. This feeling of the dilettante, I believe, was at the root of occasional fits of depression. He knew what he could do, but saw no way out of his narrow sphere. His isolation and want of scientific contact, indeed, were keenly felt by him and lamented.

His physique was excellent, his frame muscular and well-knit, his complexion sandy, his eyes and hair brown, his features gentle, thoughtful, and subdued. He stood 5 feet 4 inches, and looked a powerful and strong man. His walk was short, his forehead and face square. He was extremely fond of singing, and possessed a strong, manly bass voice, and used to sing to his children in all sorts of languages, such as Celtic, Slavic, and Caffir, etc.; and at one time, for the benefit of a school, he sang to the audience in 20 different languages. His conversation was at all times lively and brilliant; as a versifier and translator of songs he had acquired great versatility. He had always a pencil and notebook about him, even in the dark, and had a habit of reading aloud. When walking or strolling, he was always humming an air to himself, with his head turned upwards. He could not abide any show or ostentation, and was an enemy to familiarity in any shape. His disposition was generous and childlike, and, as a father, most loveable and endearing. His diet was plain, and he neither smoked nor did he drink anything but water.

It will be interesting to say something about the method he followed in the study of language. He would first go carefully through the grammar of any language he proposed to himself, and thoroughly master its internal structure. After this he attacked the Dictionary, which he used almost to devour; he then proceeded to colloquialism and phraseology, and translating and re-translating and mix and move constantly amongst those whose language he wished to follow up, in order to get hold of the true native ring and pronunciation, and obtain ease and facility of speech and expression.

His studies were carried on aloud. When he was once engaged with a new language, his power of application and enthusiasm absorbed his whole mind, and he did not rest until he had a full command of the idiom. His memory was such that he declared he never could forget anything he ever learned. With his method he engaged to thoroughly master any language in twelve months. He never learned at night, but was an early riser, and devoted daily from six to ten hours at a stretch to his study.

For many years he was a victim of acute headaches, lasting sometimes from three to four hours. In 1873 he had four strokes, brought about by over study and anxiety --his right side was paralysed and his speech affected, but only transitorily, without leaving any impediment.

His favourite haunts, as might be expected, were the old book shops and stalls of the town, and the libraries, and all such places where he could fall in with the company of the Irish, Welsh, Poles, Jews, Armenians, Bulgarians, etc. ; and he would enter all travelling gipsy camps and chat and talk away with them in their lingo, and walk miles for the chance of intercourse and conversation. As a great lover of nature, he was fond of ramblings and long pedestrian tours, and never so happy as when he could listen and inhale the true doric of the rustic population.

From 1852 to 1860 he worked as a wood turner ; in 1861 he was in turn coal agent, stationer, and kept a circulating library ; from the end of 1862 to 1863 he went to Rochdale to start as a schoolmaster in Silver Hill, which he relinquished, for want of sufficient pupils, to act as reader, printer, bookseller, and clerk. In 1864 to 1867 he was employed in printing the Manx Dictionary; and in 1868 to 1873 he turned to his old occupation as wood and metal turner. For some years he was foreign correspondent in a warehouse, and also gave lessons in French and German ; and in his latter years became manager in Taylor's Saw Mill, in Cable Street. We see from this that his career had nothing very cheerful about it; he tried his hand at many things to mend his circumstances, but he struggled in vain. He had a growing family to provide for, and his earnings were never much—material prosperity there was none. His eagerness for study, of course, largely interfered with the proper exercise of his craft. When at last, in 1876, he found a situation as manager in a saw mill, a permanency was secured. But the change had come too late, his frame was now completely under- mined. For the last four or five years of his life he had worked strenuously and uninterruptedly at his Romany, for which it was his intention to construct and publish a comprehensive dictionary, left in MS. With no mental rest and relaxation his physical powers broke down altogether. He had removed in 1874 to 109, Hendham Vale, Rochdale Road, Manchester, and here quite suddenly he died. I will quote the City News of the 9th September, 1876 :— "John Ivon Mosley, of this city, a contributor to the Manx Dictionary, and writer of gipsy and dialect pieces, was found dead in his bed on Wednesday morning (6th September). He was born in Manchester on the 7th December, 1830. He died in the prime of his life, at the age of 46, and is buried in Harpurhey churchyard."

EDITOR'S PREFACE

TO THE ENSUING ENGLISH AND MANX DICTIONARY.

DR. KELLY left no English and Manx Dictionary corresponding to his Manx and English Dictionary. He had, however, prepared a Triglot of Manx, Irish, and Erse, based upon English ; and had commenced the printing of the work when a fire broke out in the printing office and destroyed the sheets that were worked off.⁷ This put a stop to its publication at that time. Had the Triglot been published, it would, though necessarily a large and expensive work, have superseded in some measure an English and Manx Dictionary.

The Manx Society had for some time entertained the design of publishing the learned Doctor's Triglot entire; the manuscript of which had been generously put into their hands by MRS. GORDON KELLY. But on deliberation this design was abandoned.

Their attention was then directed to an English and Manx Dictionary, in manuscript, which purported to supply the place of a second part to DR. KELLY'S Dictionary. This was the work of Mr. JOHN IVON MOSLEY, of Manchester, a gentleman who without any of the advantages of a residence in the Isle of Man, had prepared a Dictionary which reflected great credit on his intellectual acumen and philological research.⁸

It became, however, a matter of inquiry, how far an English and Manx Dictionary might be drawn from the Doctor's own more copious work ; and on examination, it was found that the English and Manx portions of the Triglot were well adapted to form the groundwork of the required sequel.

The Society thereupon decided on availing themselves of the Doctor's learned labours, and requested the Rev. W. GILL, and the Rev. J. T. CLARKE to revise that portion of the Doctor's work, adapting it to form the second part to his Dictionary, and adding thereto all such words from Cregeen's and Mosley's Dictionaries as would improve and enrich the volume. This labour has fallen chiefly into the hands of Mr. CLARKE, who has brought a life-long acquaintance with the language to bear upon the performance of the task assigned him. He has judged it advisable to make numerous alterations on his own responsibility, which cannot in all cases be acknowledged. His own additions are distinguished by the letter C affixed to them ; those from Cregeen by the letters Cr. ; and those from MOSLEY by the letter M. Notwithstanding these alterations and additions, the work may still be received as entitled substantially to the sanction of Dr. KELLY'S name.
